Fountains Paradise Arthur C Clarke

The Fountains of Paradise is a 1979 science fiction novel by British writer Arthur C. Clarke. Set in the 22nd century, it describes the construction of a space elevator. This "orbital tower" is a giant structure rising from the ground and linking with a satellite in geostationary orbit at the height of approximately 36,000 kilometers (approx. 22,300 miles).

The Fountains of Paradise by Arthur C. Clarke

Arthur C Clarke is my favorite author. He focuses more on possible technology and less so on characters and ridiculous drama with those characters. This is what I love about him. The "Fountains of Paradise" definitely fits that bill. A space elevator is an amazing idea because it will make spaceflight economical and safe.

The Fountains of Paradise by Arthur C Clarke - SFFWorld

The Fountains of Paradise by Arthur C. Clarke isn't THAT dated (1979), but it was published dead center in Clarke's prime (about 1970-1985, at least by my estimation). In a seven-year window during this period Clarke won two Hugo Awards and two Nebula Awards. The Fountains of Paradise accounts for half of those.

In the two decades since THE FOUNTAINS OF PARADISE was written, the idea of an 'elevator' into space has permeated the science fiction world completely, seen as merely a fact of things to come. In part, I believe it is because Arthur C. Clarke made such an excellent case for it in this novel which builds one up 36000 km (24,000 miles)--from Sri Lanka to geostationary orbit.
